Happy Patron Stories

I got a mom and her two little daughters signed up for library cards - gave them a Baymax knuckle bump and they were so excited - well mom came back a little while later because she put her library card down, and one of the girls came up to the desk and said "My mom left her LIFE card here. Do you have it?" because mom mentioned the library is such an important part of life. Mom found it at the self checkout, and all was right with the world; it was just SO CUTE, my heart! - Melissa Rivers

I just had a patron come in and pay for 4 months toward her mother's library card payments. She knows that she pays here and didn't want her to have to worry about it for a while. I almost got a little teary over that one. – Lisha Hansen

A mom came in with her kid and said "we can't use the internet, but we need to find the height of the Andes mountains," so I helped her find some books about the Andes. When I saw them on the OPAC computer later, I asked whether there was anything else I could help them find. She said she needed a map of Mexico and all of this was so hard when they couldn't use the internet! I asked whether the teacher had told them not to use the internet for this assignment and she said no, she just didn't have her ID with her so she couldn't use the computer. I asked if she had a smartphone with her and she said yes, so I showed her how to connect to our wi-fi since she didn't understand how. She was so grateful that our library has free wi-fi. When she left, she said "Thank you for caring." - Marzi Wilson
